This is being done at the suggestion of Miss Anne Morgan, who has organized these needy young women.

Wood and Crozier, to get their views on preparedness, and deciared, sarcastically, that in the middle of July "nobody but a dunce" thought the great nations of the world were going into war.

Continuing, Mr. Gardner said: "There are 29,405 regular United States soldiers available for a field army, according to Secretary of War Garrison. It all of hem were ordered into trenches they could man a single line about fourteen

"But can our militia all be counted on to stem the first onslaught of invasion?" Has history shown us any such thing? "Gen. Wotherspoon, former chief of staff of the United States Army, tells dis in his recent report that European armies average more than five field guns for each 1,000 men—so our 634 guns would only equip a modest little army of 127,000. "In the testimony before the fortification committee in 1913 it appeared that Russia has 6,000 field guns, France 4,800 and Germany about 5,000. It will take us quite a while to raise our modest 634 to those figures if the information given us by the War Department is correct. Last session Gen. Wood testified that the entire capacity of this country working night and day is 500 guns in a year.

Four Days' Ammunition.

"After all, what good would the guns War expects us to have 580,00 by July 1. I hope he is right! you see that our 634 guns can next July be provided with just about four days' ammunition apiece if Secretary Garrison's hopes are fulfilled.

"Last year the ordnance department estimated that the government arsenals, running night and day with three shifts, can turn out 1,600 rounds of artillery ammunition daily. In other words, eight field guns can shoot away ammunition just as fast as Uncle Sam can make it. Private manufacturers cannot help the situation, for three or four months after they get their orders, says Gen. Wood. Listen to this sentence from the general's evidence:

The Munsey Trust Company A Very Splendid Record

The Munsey Trust Company has been in business exactly one year and seven months and a half. It started with a capital of two millions of dollars and with a surplus of one hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars.

Starting as a brand-new bank, without a dollar in deposits, it has built its deposits up to $3,296,612.82 in nineteen and a half months, and in this same time has increased its surplus from $152,000 to $400,000, which, with its $2,000,000 capital, makes a mighty substantial banking house.

This is a remarkably fine record, and the better so because of the business depression everywhere and the worse depression during the last five months caused by the war. Moreover, it is a much better record than has ever been made by any Washington bank at any time, however favorable the conditions.

The reason for this very splendid showing rests in the fact that The Munsey Trust Company had a right start and has been right in every step ever since.

It started with a sound, substantial capital, big enough to give substantiality to the bank and big enough to furnish a positive guarantee to depositors. And it started on the theory of giving depositors a square deal in interest—an equally square deal to the small depositor as to the big depositor.

The Munsey Trust Company announced in the beginning that it would pay interest to savings depositors and to all other depositors for every day money was on deposit that every business day in the year was deposit day and that every business day in the year was one on which money could be drawn out of the Munsey Trust Company without penalty of loss of interest.

To this fair and square way of treating depositors, to our big rate of interest paid to depositors and to the substantiality of the bank with its $2,000,000 of capital and handsome surplus (now $400,000), together with its sound, safe and alert management, is due this wonderfully fine showing of The Munsey Trust Company in its first nineteen and a half months of life.

But The Munsey Trust Company has done far more than this. It has done a very great service to the banking situation in Washington and to the community in saving the United States Trust Company from bankruptcy, with the disaster and ruin that would have followed. It has done more yet. It has already become a banking house of an institutional character—a trust company in very fact.
